

Ericka was born and raised in Vermont and from a very young age she knew that her purpose was to make a difference in her community. She used to sit in her dad's lap watching Dan Rather and Peter Jennings talking about the Iran Contra affair. She has always had a heart to fight for the underdog. Ericka has volunteered or donated money to more causes than she can count. Her husband, Benjamin, says she was the original SJW. Locally she has worked with Women Helping Battered Women, Women's Rape Crisis Center, Vermont Freedom to Marry, and served on the Board of the Vermont Victim/Survivor of Crime Council.

She has a Bachelor's Degree in Accounting from Champlain College, is a homeowner, landlord, small business owner and has spent much of her career helping small businesses grow and thrive. Like many Vermonters she was raised with values like hard work and personal responsibility – these are the values that propelled Ericka through all her trials. Raised a traditional liberal, where there is a real freedom and real acceptance of people for who or whatever they want to be, she continues to fight for these values but through a more conservative lens.

Ericka is the creator and host of the Generally Irritable podcast. Generally Irritable is the fastest growing syndicated conservative podcast in Vermont. She covers culture, politics and the impact of both on each other. To Ericka “Rigorous Honesty” is more than a slogan. She is committed to telling you the truth, even when it’s uncomfortable. Even when her own fans don’t like it because “You can’t make good decisions without good data.” Ericka is also the state videographer for Convention of States and works as press at multiple events including TPUSA events.

“We must never forget that the cost of that liberalism is offense. That is why I believe the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States are two of the most important documents ever written are. They establish the framework for a society where this redneck from rural Vermont can be anything she wants to be...”
